Teaching and Learning

Being online is an integral part of children and young people's lives. Social media, online games, websites and apps can be accessed through mobile phones, computers, laptops and tablets – all of which form a part of children and young people's online world.

The internet and online technology provides new opportunities for young people's learning and growth, but it can also expose them to new types of risks.

E-safety should form a fundamental part of schools' and colleges' safeguarding and child protection measures.

Online safety can be daunting for parents and carers, as they may have concerns about their understanding of the topic and their knowledge of latest developments. Remember that E-safety is more about their parenting and communication skills than technology.

Parents and carers should understand that it isn't enough to protect children from online harms by simply banning sites or installing firewalls and filters.

We encourage parents and carers to maintain an open and ongoing discussion about online safety at home/as a family/with their children.

My train was scheduled to leave at 17:48 and to arrive at my destination at 18:25. However, it started four minutes late, and the journey took twice as long as scheduled.
